

Taylor Stuckert is co-founder and director of Energize Clinton County and serves as consultant to the Commission's various efforts including the City of Wilmington Green Enterprise Zone (GEZ), and the Buy Local First Clinton County Initiative.

Mr. Stuckert moved to Clinton County in 1996 and is a 2003 graduate of Wilmington High School. In 2005 he graduated with a degree in philosophy from Butler University in Indianapolis, Indiana where he served as Election Day precinct manager, chaired a campus political group, and was a member of Amnesty International, philosophy club and local and state campaigns.

Following college, Mr. Stuckert moved to New York City, and worked for Jones Day, an international law firm, before accepting an invitation to the Peace Corps. While living in New York, he volunteered for NYCares, Earth Day New York, Green Apple Music and Arts Festival, and was a member of New York Road Runners.

In January 2008, he joined the Peace Corps as a volunteer in Bolivia where he worked in the Agriculture Extension program, serving four rural communities. He returned to Wilmington prematurely after the program was evacuated from Bolivia in September 2008. After planning to re-enroll in the Peace Corps for service in Ecuador, he decided to defer his service and continue his work with Energize Clinton County.
